

The Maasai Mara migration update

Since early September, the migration is now taking a new development. The wildebeests that had congregated on Paradise Plain have all crossed the river onto the Mara Conservancy. There are still massive concentrations some days on the central Mara triangle, but the most of the wildebeests are now concentrating on the border of the Mara-Serengeti ecosystems. Almost all the wildebeests and zebra that were all over Musiara and Olorukoti plains have headed south and settled on the central and Meta plains.

While the herds were heading south, guests in the Mara witnessed some small crossings by the Mara Bridge but also one of the largest ever crossing on the Talek River, when thousands of wildebeests crossed the river at a meander on the river! At the end of the crossing, there were about 300 dead wildebeests that succumbed to injuries from the stampede. The river here is almost dry but the rush-through was very intensive.
